

Customer Community for Energy

When competition continues to increase, margins are shrinking, and core services become commodities, companies must become truly customer-centric.

Your customers are informed, connected brand advocates (or detractors) interacting with each other to learn more before they buy. They trust peer recommendations and reviews over company advertisements and product descriptions, and are willing to proactively extend help to others on the brands and products they love the most.

To successfully acquire and retain customers, organizations must recognize these new dynamics, and adapt and evolve to become more flexible and responsive. So it's time for every business to start seeking and fostering enduring relationships with their customers - a relationship that goes far beyond the initial sale.

Drive Business Value with Communities

Branded online customer communities are places where your customers can connect, share their knowledge and answer each other's questions.

Building online customer communities is about creating connections between the people within your organization to the people that buy your products and services.

By integrating social and community features, your corporate website becomes a customer engagement hub and a primary source for relevant, trusted information at every stage in the customer buying cycle.

Communities work because it is a deep human instinct to use communities and be part of them. In fact, the 'social web' is all about community dynamics such as accelerating innovation, socializing issues, spreading ideas and extending influence.

Communities will help you to reduce costs, drive innovation, build trust and strengthen customer relationships. They provide real business value and smart organizations use them as the centerpiece of their voice of the customer programs.

Your customers have evolved. Have you?

Customer Success

1,500 customers help Nuon improve products and services

To support its ongoing campaign to bring about positive change for its customers and improve its webcare, Nuon started a co-creation community including a forum, blog, research module and Facebook integration to discuss ways to make energy easier, more sustainable and more affordable.

Eneco

1st energy supplier in NL with a customer community

To support its mission to become a partner instead of supplier for its customers, Eneco launched an online community to interact, provide service, gain customer insights and crowdsource product improvements.
